ELD. Z. T. WILLIAMS' LETTER.

From Beyrouth to Constantinople.

Editor of the News:

We purchased our tickets on Friday evening for Smyrna and we found only one vessel going to Constantinople via Smyrna for several days, and that one belonged to Russia, and it was very much crowded. We had to pay very high for our tickets, there being no competition.

We spent Saturday writing and visiting bazaars, purchasing a few things. At 3 o'clock McGarvey, Duncan, Crossfield and myself took our last swim in the old Mediterranean, and at 4 o'clock left the Hotel Orient for our boat, lying at anchor one-half mile from shore. We took a little boat our dragoman, Moses, had procured, and just as we were rowing out, a boy with a big bottle of ice lemonade was rattling his cups in another boat. Mr. Crossfield mentioned him to come and the crowd was treated. We then bade farewell to old Palestine and felt really satisfied with our 26 days' stay in the "Lands of the Bible," having seen most of the important places.

We entered our ship a little before 5 o'clock and got our baggage in our state-rooms in good shape. After a wash and a little rest, dinner was announced and we were ready for a hearty meal. We expected good fare, as we had to pay high, but found the same old ship cooking, but being hungry, we all partook heartily, and rested well that night, with two exceptions, Crossfield and McGarvey were more talkative in their sleep, the former talking in the early part of the night, the latter in the wee small hours. We were all occupying one large state room with four bunks, arranged so as to give us all lower berths which are much better than the upper ones.

The next day was Sunday, and the sea was rough, as usual. Most of us felt a little weak at the stomach, and by lunch, which is at 6 o'clock, we were ready to eat. Duncan and myself had lost our appetites, and what we ate disagreed with us, and Duncan was compelled to "cast his bread upon the waters." There was much heaving and groaning all day.

There are about 500 steerage passengers on board, mostly Russian pilgrims, who have been to Jerusalem to attend the Easter services, and are returning home. They belong to the Greek Church and are a tough looking people. They wear very long hair and from all appearances, it is unkempt and well inhabited. We saw a woman catching them off the head of one of her companions, and bending her thumb nails together, we supposed she was killing the vermin with considerable skill. It makes one feel crawly all over to see such, and we would not be surprised if some of the first-class apartments are not inhabited ere long. These poor people have never been taught that cleanliness is next to godliness.

Our first landing was at Tripoli on the Syrian coast, the ship remaining at anchor from about 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. Tripoli is a city of 2,500 inhabitants, and judging from the boxes of oranges being put on board, it must be a considerable orange country. The next morning at 6 o'clock we were again anchored at Mersina, a city of 15,000, and upon learning that our ship would remain there until 4 to 5 o'clock p. m., we determined to visit Tarsus, the birthplace of Saul. We engaged a small boat as soon as possible and went ashore, thinking perhaps we could catch a train going out that morning, but there is no train from Mersina to Tarsus on Monday until the afternoon; so six of us engaged two carriages at $1.20 each, round trip, three hours each way, giving one hour to see the city. The road has been in time a good pike, but is not well kept now, but we had a fine trip through a fertile valley all the way. On this trip we saw our first harvesters cutting barley with reaping-hooks. It looked like pinhook business to one not used to it. By the way we learned from a gentleman in Tarsus that reapers from America are being introduced here and will be extensively used in a few years; and threshing machines also. We saw some old time threshing floors, ready for use. They do not bind the grain, but bunch it and carry it to a place in the same field for threshing.

We arrived at Tarsus about 11 o'clock and did not expect to meet any one who could speak English, but as soon as we alighted from our carriages we met a gentleman who spoke English very well. He was in front of a large building which was a college, as we soon learned, and very soon there appeared a typical American lady, who had already recognized us and at once invited us in. She is a sister of our own Judge Brewer, of the Supreme Court, and here in an American College, teaching. This school was inaugurated by Mr. Shepherd, of Chicago, and is being supported by $100,000 endowment, mostly contributed by him. There are about 180 students in attendance. We were entertained in old fashioned American style, and felt that we had really been well paid for our trip. It does a fellow so much good after hearing all sorts of language, and none intelligible, to meet up with such a rare treat. There are twelve teachers in the school, and they all speak English very well.

We saw the birthplace of Saul and a few ancient relics of the city. There are 20 to 25,000 inhabitants there now. We got back to our boat in good time and moved out at 5 o'clock. Speaking of the disadvantages of conversing with the people of different tongues, we had an amusing experience on this ship. We wanted some eggs for breakfast, and the steward and waiters are Russians and can not understand English, and after exhausting our vocabulary in all the languages we knew, McGarvey happily caught on to a new idea that worked like a charm. He gave a few lines in homology—cackling like a hen, and the steward laughing heartily, said "iee, iee," which is Russian for eggs. We all laughed at the thoughtfulness of our companion and rejoiced over his success.

We sailed on the 9th of May into the Aegean Sea, passing the island of Rhodes about 4 o'clock a. m. About 1 o'clock we passed Patmos, the island of John's banishment. It was 12 or 15 miles away, but in plain view, and with glasses we could see a village on the shore. It is a lonely looking place, with barren mountains. But when we realize it was glorified with the Son of God, and the place of his last appearance on earth, and the place of the last revelation that God gave to man through his Son, it becomes a place of interest to Bible students. There is a small city now on the island, and it has a population of over 4,000. We also passed another town on the island of Khios, the town having the same name. It is a very beautiful city of 5,000 to 10,000 population. On the morning of the 10th at 4 o'clock we arrived at Smyrna, and at 6 o'clock we went ashore in a small boat, and took breakfast at the Bristol Hotel and arranged for a trip to Ephesus by rail. It is only a two hour's run, over a fine valley road. We started at 8 a. m. and arrived at 10. The most important ruins are about one mile from the present station, so we walked over and saw the ruins left of the old Temple of Diana of the Ephesians. The church of St. John is in ruins, but it is clearly outlined, and shows that it was a magnificent structure when John the Apostle preached there. Paul created a great deal of excitement here once as related in the 10th chapter of Acts: He preached the Gospel of Christ here with such power that the foundation of this old heathen Temple began to shake from center to circumference when Demetrius said, verse 27: "So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at naught; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshipped." Her ancient magnificence has long since departed, and there is little left to identify her splendor. This temple was one of the seven wonders of the world; was noted for its three great buildings, the temple of Diana; theater, the largest of its kind among the Greeks, and stadium or circus, which is 655 feet long and 200 feet wide. Prof. Wood in 1892 made some splendid discoveries of the ancient ruins at this place. He excavated the ancient theater, even the panorama and the cages where the wild beast were kept. The amphitheater is a natural semi-circle in the hill with stone seats arranged in regular order, from bottom to top, and would seat from 12,000 to 15,000 people. The back-ground in the panorama is beautifully arranged with marble columns, and on these a splendid gallery with marble stand and fine carvings. Here the apostle Paul was about to go when his friends persuaded him not to do so, as there was danger of being killed. Acts 19; 30, 31: "And when Paul would have entered into the people the disciples suffered him not—and certain of the chief of Asia which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring that he not enter into the theater."

After seeing the ruins we returned to Smyrna by rail, and spent next day seeing Smyrna, one of the best cities we have seen in all Syria. It has a population of over 300,000 including the suburban towns, and there are about 200,000 of this number Greeks. It has one of the finest harbors in all this country; and there is a great amount of business done here. They make a great deal of wine and ship from here, and fruits of all kinds, olives, figs, apricots &c. The people here look and dress more like white people than any place we have been. There is really some good looking women here, and intelligent ones too. We have a Missionary here, Mr. Johnson, who has a church here and a small congregation. One of his members has a son in the Bible College at Lexington preparing for the ministry. After spending the day here very pleasantly and seeing Poly Carp's tomb and the church of the Seven George's we took ship at 5 o'clock for Constantinople, and arrived there on Sunday the 18th inst. Will write my next from here, to Naples. We are all well and still cheerful.

Would Not Suffer So Again For Fifty Times Its Price.

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me alright. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my home hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. WILSON, Liveryman, Burgettstown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by M. Cravens.

Saturday thieves stole the entire board fence from around a lot belonging to Mrs. Perrine Jenkins in the Sixth Ward. They were kind enough to leave the postholes.—Maysville Ledger.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. O. Hogarty of Lexington Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by T. E. Pauli, druggist.

The Wilmore Deposit bank, of Wilmore, Jessamine county, has been incorporated. The capital stock is $20,000, and J. R. Lemon, J. H. Gough and others are the principal incorporators.

Judge Lewis for Governor.

(Glasgow Times.)

Judge Jos. H. Lewis' candidacy for governor has been promptly followed by the rallying of his legion of friends all over the State to his standard. It goes without saying that Barren county will stand by her favorite son, just as she has always stood by him. But there are other, and stronger, reasons why Judge Lewis' candidacy should commend itself to all thoughtful party-men.

For more than a generation, Judge Lewis has been prominent in Kentucky history and politics. As soldier on the battle-field, as Representative in Congress, as judge upon the bench—from circuit to supreme court—his record is known of all men, and is without spot, flaw or blemish. Honest and open as the day, unyielding as adamant in his advocacy of right, he offered his life on bloody battle-fields a willing sacrifice for principle, closing his military career as commander of the immortal Orphan Brigade. As circuit judge, and later an honored justice of the supreme court of the State, his work has been not one whit less brilliant, able, earnest and faithful and true to the people. Discussing this chapter of his illustrious career, the last issue of the Elizabethtown News well says:

"Judge Lewis is one of the soundest and ablest jurists that has graced the court of appeals bench in many years. His opinions are models of thought and of law and are based upon thorough research and the broadest principles of justice and equity. He has frequently been styled the Gladstone of Kentucky. It was through his election to the court of appeals bench that Hardin county finally won her famous suit against the L. & N. railroad, after having been once otherwise decided by Judge Lindsay."

It is such men as this the Democracy of Kentucky has in times past delighted to honor; it is such a man as this whose services are most needed now.

Kentucky Democracy is at present divided into warring camps. For four years, these hostile factions have been turning their guns upon each other; Democrats flying at Democratic throats, instead of making war upon the common enemy. Twice has Democracy been defeated by Democratic strife; once victory has cost the party its leader and brought it to the very verge of destruction. These differences are still unhealed—still gaping and yawning wounds, still harbingers of danger to come, of disasters yet menacing the road to victory. Never in all its history has the Democratic party in Kentucky stood in so deadly peril as right now. If Judge Lewis is not the leader for this supreme occasion, then there can be no leader; if all classes and conditions of Democrats can not stand together, can not be drawn together, through the magic of a name that is the synonym of honesty of manhood, of purity of purpose, of brilliant ability, of long and faithful service in the cause of the great common people, of all that is good politically, and of Spartan virtue and simplicity personally—then God help Democracy; for of a truth there are no grounds of reconciliation here. Its divisions are past appeasing and beyond the healer's art.

It is for these reasons that Judge Lewis' friends have urged him to enter the race for governor. It is for these that they believe he will be nominated, and will lead his party to triumphant, brilliant victory.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

By JAMES CREELMAN.

Mr. Bryan is temperance incarnate. He loves literature, rather than art; the trout stream, rather than the theatre; the farm, rather than the city; the small church, rather than the cathedral. He loves men more than books, and books more than money.

It is true that Mr. Bryan is provincial. He is careless of his clothes, but careful of his morals. He can not speak French or lead a cotillion, but he can give you in the purest and sweetest English the story of the struggle of man for liberty in every age and is familiar with the solid literature of the world.

I have heard him talk of his enemies without a word of bitterness. I have heard him defend Mr. McKinley from unjust attacks. He loathes and avoids personalities or abuse in conversation. This is one of the noblest and most attractive traits in his personal life. He is decent and tolerant in his speech; fair, just, ever-tempered.

There is something about Mr. Bryan that makes all who associate with him more earnest, more ready to make sacrifices, more indifferent to mere abuse and more intensely and peculiarly American. There are no secrets in his life. To be with him is like walking on the seashore in the sunlight. At 40, he has still the unsullied ideals, the unbroken faith of a boy. And any man may be his comrade; nay, his very brother.

He has the outwardness of a man who is big of mine, as well as of body. There is the ruggedness of truth in all his ways. He lives simply and some times frugally, not because he cares for money or because he does not know that there are others and more extravagant ways of living, but because his tastes are simple. The very simplicity of his life and speech is a corollary of his native dignity. His quaint points are the quaintnesses of his country.

There was a time when Mr. Bryan felt that some day the crimes of lawless wealth and rapacious corporate power against the toilers of the country would bring on a physical struggle, and in those days Mr. Bryan was a gladiator, with the fierce, unforgiving spirit of a gladiator. But a new tenderness of spirit has come into his life. He seems to be filled with the idea that love is the only uplifting force in the world, and that love is as necessary and as natural in politics and statesmanship as in private affairs.

I have met almost every great man of my own time in the principal countries of the world, but I have never met a greater man than Mr. Bryan. As a rule, one finds the idealist a man of frail body, physically incapable of making a continuous struggle. But here is an incorruptible idealist with the physical strength of an ox. Nowhere in the world is to be found a more perfect combination of mind, spirit and body. The three are evenly balanced in the Democratic leadership energy controlled by intelligence; imagination inspired by philanthropy, virility disciplined by virtue.

Why So Many Men Fail.

"One trouble with many young men who start out in business is they try to do too many things at once," says Hetty Green, "The Richest Woman in America," in the June Ladies' Home Journal. "The result is that they don't know as much as they ought to about any one thing, and they naturally fail. The trouble with young men who work on salaries is that they're always afraid of doing more than they are paid for. They don't enter into their work with the right spirit. To get on and be appreciated a young man must do more than he is paid to do. When he does something that his employer has not thought of he shows that he is valuable. Men are always willing to pay good salaries to people who will think of things for him. The man who only carries out the thoughts and ideas of another is nothing more than a mere tool. Men who can be relied upon are always in demand. The scarcest thing in the world to-day is a thoroughly reliable man."

Marion county has several cases of smallpox within her bounds.
